2018 Black Psychology Research Conference
“Healing the Wounds of Historical and Contemporary Trauma”
Virginia State University
April 13th & 14th, 2018

The Department of Psychology at Virginia State University (VSU) will hold the Seventh Black Psychology Research Conference on April 13 and 14, 2018 at Virginia State University, Petersburg, Virginia. A major goal of the conference is to highlight the outstanding research of undergraduate and graduate students at partnering institutions and to promote leadership and community engagement among the participants. The conference will also serve as a platform to encourage the development of professional networks between faculty and students at respective institutions. The keynote speaker for the conference is Dr. Margaret Beale Spencer, Marshall Field IV Professor of Urban Education and Chairperson in the Department of Comparative Human Development at the University of Chicago.

The conference is an excellent opportunity for university representatives to promote their graduate programs to students. Recruiters and students are afforded the opportunity to interact with each other in an intimate, educational setting. This conference is ideal for universities who are committed to enhancing diversity. The conference is attended by undergraduate, graduate, and doctoral students from a wide variety of universities. In the past, we've had participants from North Carolina Central University, Howard University, Claflin College (SC), University of Houston, Winston-Salem State University, East Carolina University, Norfolk State University, Virginia Commonwealth University, and Prairie View A & M University, to name a few. Please join us at the 2018 Black Psychology Student Research Conference.

Cost: $125.00 – includes registration for one recruiter. Registration for additional participants is $35. Please complete a separate conference registration for additional participants.

Registration can be completed online through the conference webpage, which will become available in early February, by accessing the Department of Psychology's webpage. Please register no later than Friday, March 16th to have your school listed in the program.
